Election Statement

My vision for the built environment prioritises listening to the users of proposed design schemes, moving beyond functional requirements to embody a fundamental value of inclusivity. A society where all needs and narratives of the people are actively integrated into the spatial practice.

I am committed to rethinking the foundational systems of architectural practice and urban planning that shape our lived experiences, striving for improved living standards through thoughtfully designed and sustainably built environments, recognising that the diversity of human experience is not an obstacle but a vital source of innovation and resilience in our designs.

I advocate for an active decolonisation of architectural thought and practice, challenging ingrained biases and fostering a shift in attitude. I hope for a future where embracing diverse cultural influences and indigenous knowledge is an essential step towards a more just and equitable built world.

I am passionate about documenting the spatial stories of marginalised communities and utilising architectural representation as a powerful tool for social advocacy and change. I believe that by revealing and amplifying these often unseen spatial realities, we can inspire a critical re-evaluation of our built environment and build a more just and equitable future.
